UK trade plunges into deficit

A large drop in exports contributed to a significant fall in Britain's balance of trade last month, as a surplus of £335m in December turned into a deficit of £132m. But a record surplus of £480m in "invisibles" ensured a positive balance of payments on current account of £348m —only half December's total.

Earlier, in the Commons, Mr John Silkin, the Labour party's thief defence spokseman, and other MPs had demanded that the House should sit today if the invasion was confirmed.

The Government is in deep trouble with its own backbenchers, as well as all the benchers, as well as all the Opposition parties. There is a sense of humiliation among Conservative MPs that a Government which came to No 10 yesterday. Mr Silkin said that the Opposition would be considering tabling a vote of censure next week against power with a commitment to power with a commitment to strengthen the nation's defence policy could not prevent the invasion of one of its few remaining overseas territories. There is also a sense of anger over what is regarded as a tardy response to a threat which became the Government over the foreign policy.

During the day, however, as more and more reports came from Argentina that the invasion had taken place, MPs grew increasingly restive at the absence of official confirmation from the Government. Court not for party politics, judge says By David Walker

The Divisional Court judge who recently dismissed a challenge by Conservative councillors to the Greater London Council's 1982-83 budget yesterday criticized attempts to use the courts for party political purposes. Mr Justice McNeill, giving his reasons for upholding the GLC against the Conservative-controlled borough of Kensington and Chelsea, complained of "issues for the hustings and not for the court", and "party super-ficialities dressed up as points of law". He added: "The proper remedy on such issues is the ballet box, not the court.

Mr Justice McNeill ex-pressed resentment at the courts having become an arena for councillors of one party to score points off others. What Kensington Council had asked him would merely have "given some politician a catchphrase and to that I am not prepared to lend judicial authority". He said that affidavits to

Webber, the chief executive of Kensington, had been unconvincing and wondered whether he had been pushed by the party political con-siderations of councillors. Kensington had challenged the GLC over £30m item in its budget for a contingency reserve and a £4.6m item to subsidize rents of former GLC properties now owned by the London boroughs. Mr Justice McNeill found both items legal and proper and refused Kensington's request to squash the 1982 precept issued by the GLC.

"To quash the precept and refused by the GLC.

"To quash the precept and liverpool's Chinatown yesterday (John the GLC over £30m item in its

The GLC's contingency reserve was legal because proper steps had been followed by the committees and the council. In the circum-stances of uncertainty sur-rounding the Government's local finance plans, such a reserve was quite reasonable. Besides, the judge said, "the GLC took highly qualified legal and professional advice and acted upon it".

The judge praised Mr Maurice Stonefrost, the GLC's comptroller of finance, and spoke of his "admirable and clear account of the budgeting process," calling him a highly experienced man of great distinction giving the least tendentious evidence. Mr Webber was compared unfavourably with him.

Alarm at 'pain' concept in vivisection rules

By Hugh Clayton

Mr George Kluth, president of the British Small Animals Veterinary Association, yesterday criticized proposed European rules for safeguarding animals against cruelty in laboratory experiments. Mr Kluth said that the profession was alarmed at the inclusion in the draft rules at the concept of "justifiable pain".

He told reporters at the

that there was support in many countries for inclusion of the concept in a convention on the protection of animals used for scientific purposes.

The convention is being prepared by the Council of Europe, whose conventions on human rights and the environment must be agreed by the 21 member states, which can than mass them which can then pass them into their own laws. Britain would be free to keep its own laws if they were stricter than the convention.

Mr Kluth said it was impossible to see how "justifiable pain" could be defined for legal purposes. He preferred the British system in which staff from the Home Office, which issues licences for experiments on spinnels for experiments on animals, could decide whether a particular case was cruel.

Mr Wiggin said the Government ha no wish to add to their suffering. It was not the ministry which had exposed them to the public gaze. He could not agree, however, to recommend that the men should be pardoned or that the findings and sen-tence of the court martial should be further reviewed. It would not be right to wipe the slate entirely clean.

"There are no grounds for doing so which could not be applied to many other mutineers and deserters from the last and other wars, nor which would not denigrate the actions of the many millions who fought bravely and obeyed orders at all times when called upon to do so", he wrote. division takes on Britain

It is ironic that Argentina's armed forces were formed to resist a British invasion during the Napoleonic Wars, and they regard their victories as we might Trafalgar and anyone except ech other for more than a hundred years more than a number years now, so in theory they might be thought a little rusty. In practice, however, they have long had contingency plans for capturing the Falkland Islands — which they call the Islas Malvinas — and are thought to have been waiting for an opportunity such as this.

In size, equipment and significance, the armed forces come second only to Brazil in South America, and in view of the disparity populaion between the two countries. countries, are proportionately bigger.
The International Institute for Strategic Studies credits them with a total of 185,000, rather more than half Britain's present military manpower. Whereas the British forces are all manned by volunteers, Argentina depends upon conscripts, who serve for a year in the Army or the Air Force, or 14 months in the Navy.

The Army is the largest of the tree services with 130,000 men, divided into two parts, one looking after the coastal region and one the hinterland. Equipment is international: American armoured troop carriers, French tanks, Franco-German, and a few Franco-German and a few British anti-aircraft missiles, British anti-aircraft missiles, and a flight of Anglo-French Puma helicopters.

The Navy is the second largest of the armed forces, which in itself is unusual. (Even in maritime Britain, the RAF is bigger that the Royal Navy). The institute's 1981-1982 edition of The Military Balance gives the naval manpower strength as The North Atlantic Council has met in special session in Brussels at at the request of naval manpower strength as 36,000, about half the size of the Royal Navy.

But 10,000 of the 36,000 are Marines, which is even more than Britain has and thus than Britain has and thus significant in the context of the Falklands. A further 3,000 are in the naval air arm. The first has four main bases, at Buenos Aires, Puerto Belgrano, Mar del Plata and Ushuais, and 18 major warships, excluding two corvettes and a number of patrol craft. Ten more vessels are on order.

Although again more are

Although again more are on order, there are only four submarines, all of them conventionally The Argentine Navy also boasts a United States cruis-er dating from before the Second World War, three modern French frigates and nine destroyers, which again vary from two up-to-date British type-42s to a clutch of elderly 1940s ships.

The Air Force has a strength of 19,500 and 223 combat aircraft, including Skyhawk fighter — ground attack machines and a squadron of Mirage interceptors.

Ironically, it has a bomber squadron equipped with nine venerable British Canberras.

Argentina's armed forces are on paper smaller, less well equipped and much less well equipped and much less experienced than Britain's but in terms of football they belong to the second or perhaps third division, not the Isthmian League and pose problems which, for British forces far from home and any friendly port, could prove insoluble.

Mr Khalef passed over a letter on British Government notepaper delivered to him last night by Mr Barry Seddon, the British Consul, who called at his home in Jericho. Israel denies camps are new settlements

Tel Aviv.—The Israeli army confirmed today that military outposts had been set up this week at the site of King Husain's unfinished palace in East Jerusalem and at other strategic points in the West Bank and Gaza, (Moshe Brilliant writes).

There was speculation that these outposts represented the start of new settlement ventrures to replace the settlements being evacuated in Sinai. The Army said the soldiers were there for security reasons and will leave when the present tension subsides.

The speculation had been fed by the fact that the soldiers deployed belonged to Nahal, a group of volunteers who combined military service with pioneering settlement.

Troops fire on Golan

From Our Own Correspondent Jerusalem, April 2

Golan Heights were injured today when Israeli troops used live ammunition to break up demonstrations against last December's annexation of the Syrian territory in the two main towns of Ma'sada and Majdal Shams. Bhutto first tried political methods with Baluch tribes and nationalist sentiment. In the end he resorted to military force, but underesti-mated tribal passions and the fighting qualities of warriors whose ferocity was once well known to soldiers of the British Raj.

The Pakistan Army fought tribesmen from 1973 to 1977 and the conflict exacerbated Baluch bitterness. When President Zia took power he stopped the fighting and sought to bind tribal wounds with cash.

He also changed the policy. His aim today is to do with rupees what bullets could never do, pouring money into the once dangerously neg-lected province. The Government says spending will be £210m next year compared with £40m in 1976.

Stravinsky's centenary year has already brought us a cornicopia of his own recorrectings from CBS, and much more is on the way, but I do not expect to enjoy anything more than Bouler's new disc including Le chant du rossignol. This has always du rossignol. This has always been one of Boulez's special favourites, proceeding from The Rite of Spring but in a manner more brilliant, more exotic, more French, and he performs it splendidly, if with a touch more weight than has been his wont, so that the flashing jewell colours of Stravinsky's Chinese fantasy are joined by an

In one of his agreeable rambles around the sporting scene towards the back of the paper recently, Hunter Davies paused to meditate about the etymology of snooker in its centenary year. In particular, he wondered whether there was any connexion with cocking a snook.

These are deep waters, Hunter. The clever men at Oxford, who know all there is to be knowed, have so far been unwilling to commit themselves on the subject. They list snooker as a word of unknown origin. We wait impatiently for the next volume of the majestic Supplement to the other things, whether they are still snookered.

Less exact scholars are content with the folk etymology. This relates that the noblest of ball games was conceived in the officers' mess at Jubbulpore by a subaltern in the Devonshire Regiment called Neville Chamberlain, who put another coloured ball on the billiard table in order to provide a variation of the game then known as "black pool". Snooker was born some years later in the Ootacamund Club, or Ooty, in the hills of Nilgiris in southern India, Sir Neville later recalled that while a game with the coloured balls was going on, a fellow officer was chatting to him about the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and the use of the nickname snooker This itself is believed to have been a corruption of the original word for a new cadet, which was Neur, in itself an oddity. Or you can believe that it came from the slang verb to snook, a variant of snoke, meaning to sneak.

To soothe the feelings of the culprit I added that we were all snookers at the game, so it would be very appropriate to call the game snooker'

Sir Neville reminisces in the snooker-room: "One of our party failed to hole a coloured ball close to a corner pocket, and I called out to him, "Why — you're a regular snooker. To soothe the feelings of the culprit I added that we were all snookers at the game, so it would be very appropriate to call the game snooker. The suggestion was adopted with enthusiasm ... While it is correct to say that the game was first played at Jubbulpore in 1875, it never really made progress until played by members of the Ootacamund Club".

All this I most powerfully and potently believe, although it does not explain how to be snookered came to describe the predicament that I always find myself in when to the green baize: of being stuck behind a ball of one colour while desirous and quite incapable of hitting a ball of another colour. Being behind the eight ball is the American description of the same predicament in a different game.

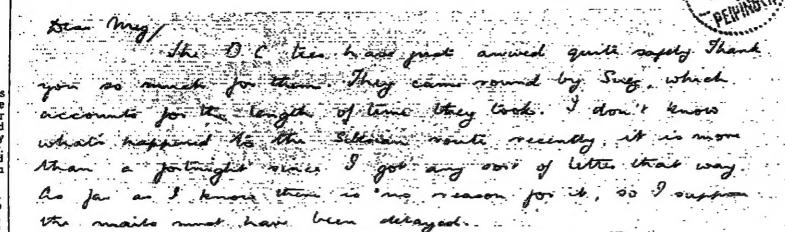

So now for snooks. The precisians at Oxford are again unwilling to hazard an uncertain etymology. This need not inhibit the rest of us from rushing in where angels fear to tread. The custom of making a gesture of derision by placing the thumb on the nose-tip and spreading the fingers fanwise, with the optional extra of joining the tip of the little finger to the thumb of the other hand, seems to have arisen other hand, seems to have arisen in the late eighteenth century. Cf The Spectator of 1712, "The 'prentice speaks his disrespect by an extended finger".

Also cf. the French faire un pied de nez, and the German eine lange nase machen. Snooks in the nineteenth century was the colloquial hypothetical surname of a person not identified or identifiable. It was the imaginary name of a practical joker; it was also a derisive retort to an idle question: "Snooks!" I can trace no connexion with Ooty, the RMA, or snooker. There the matter must rest, Hunter, until Bob Burchfield's next vol thunder. ders from the press in June. Roll on that happy day.

Public school patriot or liar of the century? Anthony Glees reveals important new evidence in the MI5 controversy

The Hollis letters: could they have been written by a spy?

Who was Roger Hollis? Was he a faithful servant of Britain? Or was he the most ingenious Soviet mole of his generation? Over the mole of his generation? Over the past year the British public has been treated to claim and counter-claim about Hollis's years in MIS and his period as its Director General from 1956 to 1965. There are those, most notably Mr Chapman Pincher, who have cast the gravest aspersions on a man who cannot answer back and they have adduced at least some evidence to adduced at least some evidence to show that Hollis's loyalty was for a time under suspicion. Others are convinced of his innocence. Until now, this group has had very few hard facts to support its case. Even the Prime Minister, Mrs Margaret Thatcher, stated on was convinced Hollis was blameless, it was impossible to prove a negative. Letters to The Times from former colleagues like Sir Martin Furnival Jones (his suc-cessor) could, for obvious rea-sons, never supply chapter and verse for their stated faith in Hollis.

Now, however, important new evidence has come to light which strongly supports the case of those convinced of Hollis's loyalty to the Crown. While this evidence does not deal with all the charges that have been made against him, it does in my own against him, it does, in my own view, totally destroy Pincher's main accusation against Hollis. This was that while Hollis worked in China from 1928 until June 1936, he was converted to Communism and that in China he formed an association with the legendary master-spy Richard Sorge and his helpers, Agnes Smedley and Ruth Kucyznski.

This evidence consists mainly of a very large number of letters written by Hollis while an employee of the British American Tobacco Company addressed mainly to his mother, the wife of the Bishop of Taunton. It was discovered in boxes after the death of the first Lady Hollis. It has been supplemented by oral evidence and by an important document freely available in the Public Record Office.

In his now famous book, Their Trade is Treachery, Chapman Pincher makes a number of serious allegations against Hollis (allegations recently repeated on the BBC). He offers three main worked for the Soviet Union: bribery, blackmail or conviction. As far as bribery was concerned, the evidence from the letters shows that Hollis could not have been susceptible to the lure of money. On November 28, 1935, for example, he wrote from Chungking:
"I must have a statement of my shares. They're not quoted in The Times so I can't gloat over all the money I'm making. I think I'll invest a little over here. We don't spend much for there's noth-spend much for there's nothing to spend it on."

Blackmail was, of course, always a possibility: but Hollis would have had to have suffered from a very serious vice for blackmail to have been used for blackmail to have been used for 30 years. Homosexuality might have been one such vice. But Hollis was certainly no homosexual and although his first marriage was not a happy one most colleagues in MI5 knew about this and about his friendship (which began in 1947) with a fellow officer who was to become the second Lady Hollis. This leaves conviction: that Hollis This leaves conviction: that Hollis became a mole because he was converted to Communism. Were it possible to make this charge stick, it would indeed be sufficient to damn Hollis. It would place him firmly in the same category as the other Thirties traitors that we now know about. Hollis's Chinese days, were they to provide evidence of a Communist conversion, would then be the missing link between Hollis and the charmed circle of Blunt, Philby, Burgess and Maclean.

But, as these letters prove, there was no such link. The story there was no such link. The story the converse of the converse is quite different from the one put out by Mr Pincher. First of all, Pincher is wrong to say that Hollis "wormed his way" into MIS after becoming a Commu-nist. In fact, Hollis was invalided out of British American Tobacco because he contracted TB about which he was, as he put it, "rather annoyed" since he had wanted to stay in the Far East. (He reurned via Canada and not Siberia, as Pincher states). Second, there is no mention anywhere in these letters of Richard Sorge or Agnes Smedley, let alone Ruth Kucyznski and they make it perfectly plain none should be expected. Hollis was far too "English" and xenophobic to have met this kind of anisate group. emigré group. A letter from Dairen is typical: "This hotel is filling up with Japanese, blousy Russians and a sprinkling of rather un-Aryan-looking Germans. Completely unexciting.... There is a large colony of Russians here who go down to the beach every day to sunthe beach every day to sunbathe in the most attenuated costumes. these filthy little people. . . ." For all we know, Sorge and his friends may have been part of this little contingent. Yet even if they shared Hollis's hotel they they shared Hollis's hotel they were still a world away from him, from his cocktail parties and most important, his golf. For while Blunt and Philby were plotting world revolution, Roger was worrying about his golf handiap. In February 1935 he

All my time abroad has strengthened that because I've seen how much other people do respect our code. Edward has let the side down utterly—has just quit on us. I'm sorry has just quit on us. I'm sorry to sound like a public school speech-day but it's so cryingly weak that any man should risk the whole future of the monarchy and Empire for personal happiness. Staunch Conservative that I am, I feel Edward has let us down as no man on earth has the power to Any historian of Roger Hollis is faced with two possi-bilities. Either these letters are genuine and Hollis cannot have been a Communist mole, ordered to infiltrate M15 or else Hollis wrote these letters so as to wrote these letters so as to confound future research into his past, which would surely make him the most ingenious liar of the twentieth century. I am certain they are genuine and I do not believe they are a fraud.

First of all, they are confirmed by all the other evidence that I by all the other evidence that I managed to gain. Hollis is, for example, on record as having warned the Foreign Office in 1945 about Stalin's true intentions for the future political life of the nations occupied by the Red Army (a warning the Foreign Red Army (a warning the Foreign Office does not appear to have taken very seriously). Furthermore, a former colleague distinctly recalled that during the war, but after the 1941 alliance with Russia, when Hollis lay sick with another TB attack in a sanatorium near Cirencester, he—Hollis warned him to continue watching the Soviet Union close. watching the Soviet Union 'closely since its being an ally did not preclude it wishing to subvert British aims.

Secondly, everyone always leaves a trail if only we bother to look for it. Blunt and his conspirators were known to be Communists by either parents, friends or lovers. Dora Philby, Kim Philby's mother, for Kim Philby's mother, for example, wrote to her husband in 1934 complaining about "Kim's bloody Communism". When questioned later, the thirties traitors simply said they had changed their minds: but their trails remained. Hollis's trail can also be seen. It is his Chinese interlude and it is "clean".

No one, certainly no contem-

No one, certainly no contemporary historian, could ever claim to be 100 per cent certain about anyone. Much of Hollis's subsequent career is as yet undocumented. He clearly made what seem to be some very serious mistakes, most notably in his failure to catch Blunt, Philby, Burgess and Maclean. Perhaps he did not believe that men from his did not believe that men from his sort of background could possibly be agents of Russia. But this lack of imagination (detectable in his letters) which may even be gross incompetence, still does not add up to treachery. One thing, however, seems so probable that it must be accepted as the truth in the absence of hard facts to the contrary: to depict Hollis as a convinced Marxist is both unhistorical and utterly absurd.

escapades and precipitate a crisis over the deputy leadership. The Tory hounds were being let loose upon Mr Whitelaw. The party and the general public were in a state of particular agitation over law and order, and as a not notice-ably hawkish Home Secretary he seemed to be a natural victim. All the more so as the personal support of the Prime Minister could not be taken for granted. When Mr Whitelaw received a when Mr Whitelaw received a rough reception from a raucous party conference at Blackpool last October, her speech on the final day implied a greater sensitivity towards his critics than to him.

So now he had to endure trial by ordeal before the Conservative backbench, home affairs comby ordeal before the Conservative backbench home affairs committee, the House of Commons itself, and finally the Conservative Central Council meeting at Harrogate. That he emerged unscathed, with strong backing from Mrs Thatcher herself at Harrogate, has a double significance for the Conservatives. He will be able not only to continue as Home Secretary with his authority undimmed, but also to remain the loyal deputy that he has been since he lost the leadership election to Mrs Thatcher seven years ago. Lenin's tomb looked rather like a high-class public lava-tory without any dignity or artistic merit. I have never Thatcher seven years ago.

The role of deputy leader is one that is always essential but often unnoticed. Mr Whitelaw's contribution to this Government contribution to this Government as deputy leader is not fully appreciated even by a number of those who approve of his performance as Home Secretary. He is not personally close to Mrs Thatcher. He is a very different kind of politician, with a shrewd instinct for what will work rather than any powerful capacity for analysis, or attachment to doctrine. His policy preferences are trine. His policy preferences are by no means the same as hers.

Yet from the very moment that Mrs Thatcher was chosen as party leader he has accepted that his chance has passed. He has known that it would by no use waiting for opportunity to knock again: if anything were to happen to Mrs Thatcher he would not be the successor. So he has concentrated on bolstering her position, not undermining it. Without him a Cabinet that has often been sadly divided would have been torn even farther apart. He has been all the more effective in providing a steadying influence within the Government because he comes from the opposite wing of the party to his leader.

In this respect, as in others, he can be compared to Mr Foot, who was an outstandingly loyal and generous deputy to Mr Callaghan from 1976 to 1980. The comparison with Mr Whitelaw is instructive in many ways. Mr Foot was the runner-up in the election at which his leader was chosen. Few which his leader was chosen. Few people thought then that his chance would come again, and Mr Foot himself gave every impression during those years of not believing that he would ever be leader of the party. Indeed, when Mr Callaghan finally retired from the leadership, Mr Foot did not at first put himself foward as unity of the Callaghan team his first priority rather than fighting tooth and nail for the policies of his own choice. He did so at some personal cost, because many of his old associates on the left came to believe that he had sold out. But a future biographer might well conclude that it was this period which saw his greatest service to the Labour

At the beginning of last week it seemed that the Conservatives might be about to follow Labour in one of its least fortunate suspicious of the coup around suspicious of the coup around the corner, to allow a partnership to flourish. The relationship of Mr Heath with the man who was his deputy during most of his years as party leader, Reginald Maudling, is more difficult to Mauding, is more difficult to assess. During Maudling's last years, when both men were in the political wilderness, they spoke up strongly for each other. But it is hard to believe that they were really all that close during their years of power.

Maudling once remarked to me that in all his time as Mr Heath's deputy they had never had lunch alone together. Whether or not alone together. Whether or not his memory was accurate, this certainly does not suggest much of a working partnership. Mr Heath was probably too wary to risk it before he became Prime Minister, and by then the pattern of their relationship had been set. Maudling had been Mr Heath's strongest challenger for the leadership indeed, many people at the time were surprised that Mr the time were surprised that Mr. Heath won and certainly did not believe that his chance had gone for ever when he lost.

Mr Harold Macmillan was still more uneasy with his deputy, "Rab" Butler, going out of his way to block Butler's chance of the succession. Yet the Macmillan premiership benefitted greatly from Butler's service. His skill in chairing Cabinet committees, his accomplishment in managing government business, his ability to cope with the really contentious problems as was demonstrated most notably by his handing of the Central African Federation—these were what contributed so much to that Government. Mr Harold Macmillan was still

Eden did not really have time to establish a close relationship with a deputy, though it is doubtful if his taut and prickly disposition would ever have enabled him to do so. Throughenabled him to do so. Through-out the years when Eden was himself deputy to Churchill' it was popularly assumed that this was an ideal partnership, based on mutual admiration across the divide of a generation. It is an assumption that has not survived the scrutiny of recent scholar-ship. Not only was the relation-ship tense and often tinged with rancour, but it must be uncertain whether Eden contributed all that whether Eden contributed all that much as a deputy as distinct from his performance as Foreign

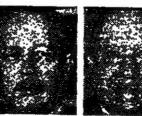

Attlee and Herbert Morrison also had a difficult relationship, but in their case it was a productive one as well. Morrison productive one as well. Morrison had made a last-ditch attempt to prevent Attlee from becoming Prime Minister after the electoral triumph of 1945, and Attlee repaid him by clinging on to the leadership for long enough to prevent Morrison from succeeding him. But in the intervening years Morrison played a greet years Morrison played a great part in the success of the Attlee Government. Like Butler, he was adept in making the wheels of government go round. What then are the qualities required in a deputy Prime Minister? Not, it would seem, patibility with the Prim Minister, strangely enough: Butler and Morrison were highly successful distinctly incompatible; and Mr Whitelaw is still somewhat distant. It seems to matter much more that the deputy should be complementary to the Prime Minister, complementary in administrative skills, in political strengths, and even possibly in opinions as well. There may be no friendship at the top in politics, but there can be a belance of power.

NAKED AGGRESSION

Argentina's seizure of the Falkland Islands is as perfect an example of unprovoked aggression and military expansion as the world has had to witness since the end of Adolf Hitler. A number of precedents might be cited: the Soviet interventions in Hun-Czechoslovakia and gary, Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan, the Indian takeover of Goa in 1962, the Indonesian occupation of East Timer in 1975, the Moroccan annexation of Western Sahara in 1976. All of these were deplorable acts of force, but were undertaken with at least a pretence of acting on behalf of the inhabitants of the territories concerned. In the Soviet cases, the forms of independence were maintained after invasion—keeping open at least the possithat the substance bility that the substance would be gradually restored. In the other cases it was at least possible to argue that the annexed territories were part of the same land mass as the annexing power and that the population belonged to the same linguistic and cultural group.

But Argentina has not even such threadbare excuses as those. Even if the islands were uninhabited or underwater they would not fall within the two hundred mile conomic zone that Argentina would nowadays be entitled to claim; and their inhabitants have not only been able repeatedly to make clear their unanimous and strong desire not to be part of Argentina but also are of manifestly. different stock from the Argentine population and in no sense of Argentine origin. The islands and their inhabitants have been British for as long as Argentina has been a state. If there is any principle behind Argentina's action, it is one that threatens the right to self-determination of all island peoples throughout the

The Argentine junta has been generous enough to "guarantee the lives, property and rights" of the 1,800 English-speaking inhabitants not including, presumably, their right to decide their own political destiny. Those obstinate enough to insist on this right and resist the imposition of Argentine rule will be "punished according to the law". What law? No doubt the law under which thousands of Argentine citizens have "die appeared" sometimes with their children, since the present military regime came to power since 1976.

There is a different law which should be enforced, the law of nations as embodied in the UN charter. One would like to think that the United Nations would enforce it; would be able, that is, to take collective action to restore the security of the Falkland Islands by expelling the Argentine invading force. One would like to think the mere threat of such action would induce the invader to draw back. But past experience gives no encouragement. Not since the Congo in 1960 has the UN been prepared to undertake collective action in other than a "peacekeeping" role — that is a role of freezing the situation as it is rather than reversing the consequences of aggression. In this particular case it is a foregone conclusion that any proposed action by the Security Council will be vetoed by the Soviet Union, not only because the Soviet Union always vetoes any effective action by the Security Council but also because the Soviet Union, swallowing its ideological scruples, loses no opportunity to curry favour with Argentina's fascist with Argentina's fascist rulers, on whom it depends for crucial grain supplies. At worst, the United Nations will ratify the fait accompli. At best, they will utter a platonic appeal for withdrawal. Experience teaches that injustice is only redressed, in international affairs, when the injured party is able and willing to resist. The British government is right to put its case before the United Nations, but only as a prelude to taking action, and to give Argentina time to realize the foolish mistake she has made. But it must be clear that this will be followed by action unless Argentina backs down very rapidly.

Our capacity for resistance in the South Atlantic may not be perfect. We no longer "rule the waves". But we still have one of the world's more powerful navies, including a number of nuclear-powered submarines, one at least of which is almost certainly now close to the scene of action.

We can inflict severe damage on the Argentine navy if we have to reply to force with force. It should be clear that we are prepared to do that if the invaders are not withdrawn within a very short

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Report of proposals on move to unity

From the Bishop of Norwich Sir, I cannot see this report satisfying those with Roman fever, or allaying the anxiety of those with Roman phobia, to those with Roman phobia, to quote your Religious Affairs Correspondent (report, March 30). The dilution of the personal jurisdiction of the papacy is unlikely to appeal to the RC Congregation of the Faith, or indeed to the present holder of this high office, as we may be able to judge for ourselves this May, if he speaks of faith or morals.

The attempt to luli Anglicans, especially in England, into ac-ceptance of a watered down-papacy is unlikely to succeed, even in the equivocal sentence on even in the equivocal sentence on pages 84 and 85:

If the leadership of the Bishop of Rome has been rejected by those who thought it was not faithful to the truth of the Gospel (compare the recent additions and dilutions of the Immaculate Conception, Infallibility and, as recently as 1950, the bodily assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary into Heaven, which appears to have had no scriptural warrant for 1900 years) and hence not a true focus of unity, we nevertheless agree that a universal primacy will be needed in a reunited Church, and should appropriately be the primacy of the Bishop of Rome.

Appropriately? Here is the fatal

Appropriately? Here is the fatal Appropriately? Here is the fatal historical error. This universal primacy has already been tried and failed. By the sixteenth century all such power was seen to corrupt, until the Reformation insights of justification by faith in Christ, the supreme authority of the Holy Scripture and the maintenance of a threefold and not fourfold ministry delivered the continuing Catholic Church in this land into our present Church of England freedom.

From this point the Gospel was released into the world, in the released into the world, in the autonomous, episcopal, biblical provinces of the Anglican Communion, now numbering over 60 million. We look to Canterbury with love for pastoral care and guidance and not to Rome for control and direction.

Was the commission so mesmerized by the size of the Roman Church, with all its doctrinal weaknesses, that it did not look at the Canterbury model of free, autonomous, sisterly churches?

Let us think the unthinkable and pray for the impossible, and the Gospels encourage us in boldness, so that we firmly and lovingly reject this concept of universal primacy, which is surely papacy "writ small". Let us love each other as equal Christians under Christ, the only ultimate and eternal Read of the Church, praying that Roman, Anglican, free church and Orthodox churches grow into closer fellowship as they move into deeper holiness through the renewing work of the Spirit of

Yours faithfully. MAURICE NORVIC: The Bishop's House, Norwich.

From Canon Colin Beswick From Canon Coun Beswick
Sir, Certain phrases in Cardinal
Ratxinger's letter to Mgr Alan Clark (report, March 31) underline one of the difficulties of any rapprochement with Rome. He writes of the search for a "substantial" agreement, of the acceptance of dogmas, the possibility of divergent interpretations and the importance of a definitive and the importance of a definitive agreement. Perhaps the issue lies ot so much in the differences between us as in the possibility of an agreement to differ. Simone Intellectual adherence is never owed to anything whatsoever. For it is never in any degree 2 voluntary thing. Attention alone is voluntary. And it alone forms the subject of an obligation.

God and the supernatural must always transcend any human formulation. Hence religious truth is bound to be approximate. Over-definition tends to the idolary of a conveniently circumscribed God and too strict a formulation leaves little scope for adjustment to the passing fashions of human thought. Yet inevitably it is within such fashions of thought and language that we make the attempt to communicate religious ex-perience. Let us beware of bartering our precious Anglican liberality for inappropriate attempts at exactitude. COLIN BESWICK, Overbury Vicarage, Tewkesbury, Gloucester.

Supplementary benefit From Mr Frank Field, MP for Birkenhead (Labour)

Sir. Each year Parliament approves changes in the minimum level of income for those unable to work. This minimum income, paid in the form of supplemen-tary benefit, is adjusted annually in line with price increases. On a number of occasions the Prime Minister has tried to justify cuts in unemployment, sickness and other benefits on the ground that the very poorest are protected by the supplementary benefit safety

net. In future this will not be so. You reported the proceedings at the committee stage of the Social Security and Housing Benefits Bill (March 3) when the Government announced changes to the way supplementary benefit to the way supplementary benefit increases are to be calculated. As housing costs are to be covered by the new provisions in the Bill the Government intends to take housing costs out of the retail price index when computing supplementary benefit increases.

The RPI is not an accurate processes faced measure of price increases faced by a family on average income, let alone one on low income. Evidence to the Royal Commission on the Distribution of Income and Wealth showed that over the period 1956-74 prices rose for the poorest 5 per cent by 26 percentage points more than for all families and by 30.9 percentage points more than for the richest 5 per cent.

The reason for this differential impact of inflation is that the weights given to different goods and services in the retail price index do not reflect accurately the expenditure patterns of poorer people. For them a far greater part of their income is spent on necessities, such as food, housing and heating, than appears in the calculations.

To take out of the calculations one of the basic necessities will ensure that the index becomes an even less accurate gauge of changes in the poor's cost of living. To do so when housing costs are rising faster than the average rise in prices, as is happening now, will minimize even more the impact of inflation on the budgets of the poor. The Government's new index for adjusting supplementary benefits will not increase the numbers of the poor (indeed, as it is reducing the minimum income level it may in a technical sense decrease the numbers living at or below the official poverty line) but it will mean real cuts in their standards of living. Today, all the needs of a poor child have to be covered on an income of a little over £1 a day. For the five million or more people on a poverty line income it is difficult to over-estimate the importance of a cut in their benefit which the Government has just announced.

While it was announcing this cut the Government was busy finding the revenue to finance again the tax cuts to surtax payers given in the 1979 Budget. From this measure alone the richest 7 per cent have so far gained £4.8bn. In these circumstances the Government's claims that the money is not available to protect the income of the poorest of our community sounds just a little bollow. Yours faithfully.

FRANK FIELD. House of Commons.

Italian mail delays

From Mr John Roe Sir, It is a matter of pride allied Sir, It is a matter of pride allied to money (Letters, March 18, 20, 25). Italians accept that there are fast and slow ways of doing things in their country; but the better ways cost more. Travellers on business or in a hurry take the Trans-Europe Express or its equivalent, never the ordinary fast trains, which may not arrive. Similarly with the postal service. An express letter is a sop to the dignity of the post office. You show by your willingness to pay that you take them seriously, and for the price of an excellent service you get a good one, the effect being inflationary.

Our own post office seems party to the deception. To send an express letter from here now costs at least £1.50 but, if this is any consolation, it will almost certainly reach its destination anywhere in Italy within a few days. Yours sincerely,

JOHN ROE, 21 Huntington Road, March 25.

Citizenship obstacle

From Mr David de Gale Sir, In castigating the Home Office for raising the fee for naturalizaton to £200 per family member — incidentally with a small discount for joint husband/wife applications and moderate package terms for minors. package terms for minors: one must be fair about these things — Mrs Dummett (22 March) pointed out that the Home Office is as a consequence arbitrarily denying citizenship, confirmation of citizenship, confirmation of zenship or re-establishment of citizenships unilaterally abro-gated by HMG, for those who have had their applications pending for upwards of two years and who now find themselves unemployed or on low pay. This must surely be so.

Having just inserted the statutory public notice required of an applicant (in a "cheap" local paper), may I add that the bill for this extra item of bureaucratic nonsense was £76.20 — which represents, when added to the fee, more than a grateful govern-ment paid to us in toto for two conscript service (as VEATS National Service privates) at a time when our chizenship was not doubted.

Nor is it true, in fact, to say that those who "have lived here, legally settled and continuously, since before 1973" have a right to registration on payment of the lower £70 fee. Like many others who have been here since before the war and who were still United Kingdom citizens in 1973, I have no such right. Indeed, I now find that if I were rash enough to pay the charming island of Grenada a visit, to express my gratitude to it for harbouring a stranger's name on their citizenship files until it can rejoin my body in the United Kingdom (in two years' time), I risk losing my chance of naturali-

The age of the cable From Mr David Fisher

Sir, Your leading article on the age of the cable (March 23) made nearly all the points I was about to raise in this letter, wisely advocating a minimum of regulation in the establishment of new telecommunications services. In one important respect, however, your comment was too limited: by concentrating like the struthious Home Office, on the quality of programme content, the true significance and value of cable was understated.

It would be unfortunate if the benefits of two-way cable for use in both the home and the socalled tertiary sector of industry were limited by concern that pornography or commercialism on entertainment channels should be kept in check. The logic must surely be that the provision of the facility should be separated from the uses, what-ever they may be. As so much of our economic and cultural life is amenable to translation into electronic terms, the capacity to provide services should not be restricted to companies who own cable installations; an analogy with access to printing for all who can pay the bills is appropriate.

It follows, therefore, that the number of channels available on the cable should be large. To fix the number as low as 30 — as appears to be the intention — is a decision which will be regretted Bedford Chambers, Covent Garden, WC2. March 31.

well before the end of the century. Better to have 90 spare channels now than a shortage of 70 channels a decade hence. As for the entertainment channels themselves, it is, of course, entirely right to relate the degree of necessary control inversely to the scarcity of channels. As you stated, new circumstances require new policy. While some form of licensing seems unavoidable, could this not be on an "open" basis in which anything will be acceptable but only its availability will be controlled according to its nature? Thus, a channel devoted to "adult" entertainment would have to be provided as pay TV only, via a scrambler, and attract a high rate of VAT or excise duty. Indeed, the obvious attrac-tions for the Exchequer of this

The Stubbs appeal

From Mr L. P. Bamford. Sir, The Fitzwilliam and its

Sir, The Fitzwilliam and its proposed purchase of a Stubbs have produced a chain of correspondence which I have been reading with interest and envy.

It so happens, you see, that we in the far north have been attempting to publicise the fact that we are trying to raise £100,000 to enable the Bowes Museum, in Barnard Castle, to purchase two magnificent Canapurchase two magnificent Cana-lettos which it already has on loan from a north country family. Ioen from a north country family. The £100,000 is the balance of a total of £385,000, the fiscally agreed figure, not so far secured. The "at auction" price could well be in seven figures and the pair would almost certainly leave the country, if put to auction.

I see our prospect as possibly bolder and sounder than that of the Fitzwilliam. There are Stubbs aplenty in the south - how long ago is it since we acquired one for the Tate? The Canalettos would be the only ones on open public display in the north and would be seen by upwards of 120,000 people every year. But we are out of sight, well north of Potters Bar, and apparently and regretfully well out of mind, because so far the efforts to attract publicity and national support have unremarked. Yours faithfully, L. P. BAMFORD. Chairman, Friends of the Bowes

Control of the police From Mr Adrian Tibbitts

Sir, Mr James Lemkin's pro-nouncement (March 26) that "the time has come for the Home Office to reaffirm that throughout England and Wales the Home out England and Wales the Home Secretary is the ultimate political power in respect of the police" is somewhat simplistic.

If the effect of the Police Act 1964 is to give the Home Secretary this power (and aca-demic lawyers are far from demic. lawyers are far from united on the precise position) this certainly was not the intention of the Royal Commission on the Police (1962) which reported (para. 149): "Our conclusion is that the police forces of this country should not be brought under the direct control of the central Government."

All that can be said with certainty is that control of the police is a typical "grey area", of the kind so convenient to the Establishment mentality, and such a hindrance to our elected representatives when they are attempting to carry out their duties on behalf of their electorate.

Mr Lemkin calls for a partner-ship between police and public. As a solicitor, Mr Lemkin will know that only a fool would enter into a partnership with someone he cannot call to account. Yours faithfully,

The theology based exclusively on first is that the crucifixion Jesus's death on the Cross and resurrection are two tends to depict the world as things which happened to Jesus of which we can be fundamentally opposed to God, and that it thinks of salvation as a process of escaping from the world. This has had fairly disastrous consequences for the interest most confident. For firstcentury Jews a criminal's death was so shameful an experience that the evangelists would hardly have described Jesus suffering such a death if they had been inventing a story. Similarly, a which certain Christians have taken in the cares and events As a corrective to this, testimony. The second reason is that the more one emphasizes man's original goodness, and possession of God's image, the more a scandal it is that he should have fallen so far from that state of goodness. If one is inclined to sit rather lightly with regard to the doctrine of original sin the scandal becomes even more enormous, because it emphasizes that sin is deliberate. Sin causes the human race to face a dreadful problem. It would be unrealistic to imagine that man could ever be able to grow out of sin, relegating sin to the past. It would be altogether opposed to every principle of justice to suppose that God would ever pretend that sin did not matter and could be over-looked. That would be like imagining that man could remain sinful, and at the same time have the sort of relationship with Good to which sin is a barrier.

The crucifixion provides an element of hope for man in this difficult predicament. Mildly disinterested acts of benevolence by man would avail very little against sin. Man needs to offer to God full-scale resurrection of the something very big. Some-would be such an act, and than as a result of reliable this is the offering which testimony.

Holy Week commemorates.

Theologians have given a variety of explanations as to how the merits, or benefits, of this act may be shared with other members of the human race. However, there has been a strong feeling over the centuries that this single sacrifice, the benefits of which can be shared, is worth more than any good actions of which individuals may be capable. Taking the Cross seriously certainly does not mean underplaying he applied meticulous stan-other ideas to be found in the dards of observation and Gospels.

Quite the contrary. Recog-nition of the difference between the actual state of the world, and the perfection which is associated with God's creation needs some dramatic event to redress the balance. The early Christians were right to have given the title Holy Week to the week when Jesus surrendered himself on the Cross, and when God indicated his sacrifice by the event of the resurrection.

10m jobless in US

Unemployment in the United States rose to nine percent last month, equaling the post-war record set during the oil price recession of 1975, and meaning that close to 10 million Americans are without jobs. The figures reflect an increasing weakness in the US economy—the jobes rate was 7.2 per cent in July. In contrast West German unemployment fell last month to 8.7 per cent, or between 1.8 and 1.9 million compared with 8.2 per cent in February.

Supasave jobs threat

More than 600 jobs are at risk at Supasave, an East Midlands chain of 19 supermarkets; which is going into Midlands chain of 19 supermarkets; which is going into-voluntary liquidation. It is hoped some stores may be taken over by other chains, which will save some jobs. Meanwhile, more than 360 redundancies: were announced in the metal refining and chemical industries. Inco of Canada is to shed 200 jobs at its research and development plant in Birmingham and its Daniel Doncaster metals subsidiary in Sheffield. And 160 Monsanto employees at Fawley, Hampshire, are to lose their jobs.

Switch on for UK video

Video tape recorders are to be assembled in this country for the first time, at the Thorn Emi's complex at Newhaven, Sussex. Production is expected to begin at Newnaven, sussex. Production is expected to begin in October after a £2m refitting programme and by mid-1983 the plant should be turning out 240,000 units a year. The agreement to produce the VHS tape recorders designed by JVC (Japanese Victor Company) is the result of four year's association between the companies.

© Cocoa lost the gains it made briefly this week. The May contract closed at 5989 a forme, a fall of £4 on the day and £21 during the week, April was £1 lower yesterday at £979 a towne. lower yesterday at £979 a tonne. Dealers have been impressed by estimates of continued heavy surpluses this year, and the restraint shown by some origins, notably Algeria, in holding material off the market has done little to restore confidence. © Rubber's advance almost petered out yesterday. May material slipped from 58.75p a kilogramme to 58.45p, while the June contract rose slightly to 59.30p from 59.15p a kilo-gramme. A common view is that the market is technically over-bought, but that a strong buyer has so tar thwarled fundamenals.

Tin drifted without obvious direction, confirming that it may have found a trading range. Cash metal ended the day £10 down at £7,037 a tonne, still £11 above the week's opening.

UK trade into deficit

Britain's balance of trade level a year earlier in the went £132m into the red in forth quarter of 1981. But the January after a £335m survolume of imports was nearly plus in December, as exports 20 per cent higher, and show sharply and imports no sign of slowing. mcreased

A principal cause of January's trade deficit was a drop in oil exports of £237m. Large surpluses on Britain's oil trade have for several months prior to January disguised big deficits on non-oil trade.

In the fourth quarter of 1981 the deficit on non-oil trade was £146m while the oil account notched up a record surplus of £698m. In January, by contrast, an oil surplus of £168m failed to cover a huge non-oil deficit of £300m.

Excluding oil and erratic most private forecasters items such as ships, North expect the surplus to dwindle see installations, aircraft and precious stones, the volume of exports was down 4 per cent in January while imports were up 2.4 per cent.

Officials pointed out that the

But a record estimated surplus of £480m on the balance of invisible trade, such as financial services and shipping, ensured a positive balance of payments on current account of £348m. This was only half the £641m recorded in December.

Import figures for May and June 1981, available yesterday for the first time after being held up by the civil service dispute, show that the big surge in imports came in the summer and autumn last. This is likely to reflect the slower rate of destocking and greater investment as indusgreater investment as indus-try picked up slightly after the bottom of the recession

Mr John Biffen, Secretay of State for Trade, welcomed the January current account surplus of £348m which he surplus of £348m which he said confirmed the view that Britian would continue to run a surplus for some while ahead. Exports push | State chairman dismissed

Mr Glyn England, who was effectively dismissed yester-day as chairman of the central Electricity Generat-ing Roard, has launched a bitter attack on the Govern-ment's dealings with his industry, which he said had pushed up electricity prices and done nothing except cause greater inefficiency.

Mr England, who disclosed Mr England, who disclosed that he is a founding member of the Social Democratic Party, was told by Mr Nigel Lawson, Secretary for Energy, on Thursday that his five-year term would not be renewed when it expires on Mr. A successor had not be the secretary and the secretary had not be secretary and the secretary had not be secretary as a successor had not the secretary had not be secretary for the secretary May 8. If you can afford the premiums, you can now enjoy inflation proofing of retirement benefits.

It is, of course, the advent of index-linked gilts, and the promise of more index-linked issues to come which has made it possible to offer inflation-proofed pensions.

It also makes it possible to calculate precisely when you have to start paying premiums to be certain of buying yourself a pension of buying yourself a pension or two-thirds of your final salary — the maximum allowed by inland Revenue.

Assuming you can afford to invest the maximum per-missable amount (17.5 per-costs only £400.

The scheme will be at particular interest to the £10 million employees who are in a job with no pension scheme. Most are unaware that they are eligible for $110 to provide the control of the cost of the c tax relief on premiums paid to a "self-employed" pension scheme such as Targets

How does Target's-indexlinked pension scheme com-pare with the more conventional plans? Target believes that the same level of contributions to a conventional self-employed pension scheme would produce a pension at retirement roughly double that paid under the index-linked plan, but it would, of course, remain at that level.

Dramatic victory for Miss Opie chaser two seasons ago, winning five races, including Cheltenham and Liverpool Foxhunters. Well below his best when runner-up to Lone Soldier on Thursdsay.

ROYAL MAIL: 11st 10lb. The National cluded Stan Mellor in his record-breaking career as a jockey. Has a consistent record as a trainer in the race and New Zealand-bred Royal Mail is strongly fancied to improve on his third to Aldamit last year. Good going is a must for my first choice. ALDANITI: 11st 9lb. Last year's tear-jerking winner for the former cancer victim, Bob Champion. Skilfully nursed back to his best by Josh Gifford. Has plenty to do at the weight. AGAIN THE SAME: 11st 8lb. Doubts about fitness and soundness of this useful three-mile handicapper, John O'Neill attempts to complete the course for the first time.

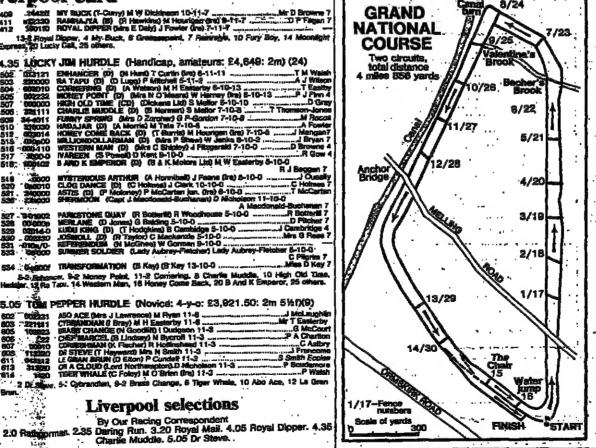

CARROW BOY: 11st.77b. Smart Irish chaser at his best who has not recaptured form of last season. In lead when fell at the tenth last year. Jockey Gerry Newman finished a close third on Drumroan to I use in 1979.

Gerry Newman finished a close third on Drumroan to Lucius in 1978.
GRITTAR: 11st.Sib. Top class hunter-chaser and mount of 48-year-old Northamptonshire farmer, Dick Saunders. Oldest jockey to win the face so far was 41-year-old Tommy Pickernell in Pathfinder in 1875. Jumped brilliamly when winning Haig Foxhunters last season. Ran well for a long way behind Silver Buck in the Cheltenham Gold Cup. Last Leicestershire-trained winner was Reynoldstown in 1936.
PETER SCOT: 11st.Sib. Haz won a Welsh Grand National during a long and successful career. Returned to winning form at Nottingham last week. Best in soft ground. Good joinper over park fences but may not be suited to Aintree.
TRAGUS: 11st. 4lb. Mount of champion jockey elect, Peter Scudamore. Fast time in recent victory at Folkestone. Has fallen only once in 25 chases. If he takes to these fences, must go well.

DEEP GALE: 11st 2lb. Won five races last season but seems to have gone back. RAMBLING JACK: 12st 1lb. One of two for Ken Oliver who has trained the runner up four times. Training troubles have prevented him from realising his full potential. Has run reasonably in his only two outings this season; must be respected.

MAN ALIVE: 11st. Mackeson Gold Cup winner in 1979. Has a good turn of foot and would be a live outsider at his peak. Same type as Gordon Richards' previous winner, Lucius. MULLACURRY: 10st 12lb. Mount of Thomas Taffe, long-legged son of legendary Pat Taffe. Smart, in form, Irish 2½ miler who has won four of his last five starts. Cannot be discounted.

SAINT FILLANS: 10st 11lb. Headstrong and inclined to hit fences when tired. A good second to subsequent Cheltenham Gold Cup runner up, Bregawan, at Kempton but may not treat these enormous obstacles with sufficient respect.

GOOD PROSPECT: 10st 10lb. Bought by Prince Charles as a replacement for Allibar last season. Now back with John Edwards, Hard to fancy him.

CURRENT GOLD: 10st 8lb. Won National Hunt Handicap at Cheltenham last year but has yet to show a semblance of that ability this season.

GANDY VI: 10st 8lb. Has had a fair season in Ireland, needs the mud.

ROUGH AND TUSTBLE: 10st 7lb. One of Fred Winner's two possible runners, the mount of John Francome. Third to Rubstic in 1979; runner-up to Ben Nevis in 1980. Reportedly has had leg trouble. Well besten in hunter chases and tailed off in the Kim Muir at Cheltenham.

THE VINTNER: 10st 7lb. North country plodder. Hairsen willed up in 1880. Uninspiring record at Aintree; pulled up in 1980 and refused in 1981.

ROYAL STUART: 10st 4lb. One of Stan Mellor's three runners in 1980. Ran well last year until a leather broke and parted company with his rider at the 20th fence. No form this season.

SUN LION' 10st 2lb. Likes good going. Useful hunter chaser but has something to find on form.

SENATOR MACLACURY: 10st. Fifth last year as seven year old. There could be worse outsiders.

ARTISTIC PRINCE: One of Jenny Pitman's two runners. Fell in 1979. Stamina is his strong point but form credentials do not annear good enough. JIMMY MIFF: 10st. Won very easily over four miles at Haydock in November. Inconsistent but miles at Haydock in November. Inconsistent but hard to rule out completely. CHEERS: 10st. Last to complete the course behind

MONTY PYTHON: 10st. Blinkered when flat out to best Gienhawk by a length at Kempton. Surely not good enough to win for Mrt Pitman.

COLD SPELL: 10st. Stan Mellor's third runner.

Ran sound race on only outing this season when third to Ballyross in Grand Mititary Gold Cup. Stays well but should not be good enough.

THIS WAY: 10st. Jumped course safely when third to Mr Marisbridge in 1981 Tophum Trophy, but that is only recommendation.
CHORAL FESTIVAL: 10:s. Left in lead at 19th fence last year but weakened and fell four from home.
DEER MOUNT: 10:st. A repetition of the Foinavon opiod around in his own time.
THREE OF DIAMONDS: 10st. Unlikely to be the er in the pack of the 1982 National.

SUMMARY: It is impossible to get away from Royal Mail, Aldaniti. Grittar and Three To One. Aldaniti looked in magnificent shape on the track yesterday morning, but the fast ground specialist, Royal Mail, must be the first choice. Barring accidents, horses with proven jumping ability on the course always fight out the finish, so have a gott the Tricast: perm any three from these four to finish in the correct order (24 bets). This system has worked twice in the past nine years and the odds are always good. has worker with a work odds are always good.

The Wonder

The programme for the opening day at Longchamp tomorrow has been complicated by the hesitance of two leading French trainers. O'Brien's first is Achieved Vincent O'Brien believes Vincent O'Brien believes had at The Curragh this afternoon saddles Achieved as his first starter of the new flat season in the Gladness Stakes, our Irish correspondent writes. Achieved, who went unbeaten through his first scason, was rated not only the best Irish two-year-old of last season but through the winter months has occupied a prominent position in the winter betting on the 2,000 Guineas.

The opposition to him today The opposition to him today includes Kilian, an unbeaten four-year-old trained by David O'Brien and Noble Monk, who won a six-furlongs handicap under a big weight here last week. This, however, is not a good race for four-year-olds, and it will be the first major shock of 1982 should Achieved fail to win. Some 1.000 Guineas longshots Some 1,000 Guineas longshots will be attempting to enhance their status in the April Fillies Stakes, and the one I like best is Wolver Maid, who started last season with a runeway eight lengths victory at Leopardstown.

Irish-trained horses have only won the Grand National on two occasions since Vincent O'Brien shandoned the training of jumpers to concentrate on the flat. The major Irish aspirant today is Mullacurry.

O DISCOVERING HEDGEROWS (BBC2 8.30 pm) is the title of a new ven-part series to be screened monthly. It is one of those delightful nature programmes the BBC does eo well that draws ones attention to the obvious which, in our ignorance, we have overlooked. David Streeter and Rosamund Richardson, in this grid Rosamund inchardson, in mis-first programme, take us to the countryside in April to explore with them the wonders of our fallow fields and roadside verges. Cooks with an eye on budget bergains will learn a lot from Miss Richardson, she suggests recipes that can be made from the freely svallable plants Beautifully photographs the seties will certainly encourage our appreciation of something that, untortunately, is slowly disappearing from the countryside.

The reality of today's system whereby the DHSS can withdraw invalidity benefits at the drop of a hat has been the bee in Joe's bonnet for the past dozen years. In the programme the sensible and aggreed Joe talks about some of he people who are victims of the Seturday Night Theatre's A Lhasa from the beginning of the century until the Chinese invasion of 1950, Simon Normanton, the producer, has done sterling work tracking down these largely unseen films (in fact, only 5% of them have been seen on television). His three-year task has produced a picture of a medieval country dominated by monks, monasteries and living Buddhas. Although a lot of the film is in . colour it is understandably not up to the standard we usually associate with their standard in the resolution but the grandeur of the Forbidden City is still breathtaking. cruellest test of horse and jockey on the racing calendar, and the best known jumping race in the world.

That it is so tough is only an accurate reflection of the sport's origins, when Ascendant Irish gentlemen in Class and Passanguan would men in Clare and Roscommon would dare each other to "pounding matches" across the stiffest country they could find, the winner being he who pounded his adversary to a standstill. The refinement of chasing steeples was merely putting the same daredevil sport on a fixed course.

The National is a race for common men and true sportsmen, relatively untainted by the smell of old family and new money that pervades so much of the Flat. It was pervades so much of the Flat. It was so in 1839 when William Lynn, punters.

To call the Grand National a proprietor of the Waterloo Hotel horse race is to call the whitbread Round-the-World a boat Earl of Sefton and staged his first race. The National Steeplechase at race. The National is a tradition, an Grand Liverpool Steeplechase at

With a frisson of distaste the Liverpool Mercury reported: "As early as nine o'clock the road leading to Aintree was crowded with pedestrians of the usual class, including pie-men, chimney sweeps, cigar sellers, thimble riggers and all the small fry of gaming table keepers."

But the snobbish Mercury had stronger objections: "It was no doubt a very exciting spectacle, but we can no more be reconciled to it on that account than we are to cockfighting. bullbaiting, or any other popular pastime which is attended with the

For the record, that first race was won by Lottery, a well-named nine-year-old whose party trick was to jump over the luncheon table of his owner, Mr Elmore, without knocking the sugar. Another rider, Captain Becher, was unseated at a three-foot jump and hid in a brook near by while the rest of the field jumped over him, thus ensuring himself immortality.

Seventeen runners went to the post that first day to tackle the four miles and 29 jumps, including three brooks and a terrifying five-foot stone wall in front of the stands. The wall was too severe even for Aintree, and was soon replaced by a water jump.

But today's course, 4 miles 856 yards, with 30 jumps, remains the toughest anywhere. During the Great War a substitute National was run for three years at Gatwick, and was a pale shadow of the real thing. If Aintree were to close and the event supreme test of courage for horse were to move to Doncaster, as has been suggested by the Jockey Club, it would be a different and lesser race, whatever it was named. whatever it was named.

Recent threats of closure have produced by no means the first Last Grand National, nor will it be the Last. Doubt has clouded its future ever since Lord Sefton sold Aintree to Tophams in 1949, and those who love the race must hope that Red Rum's proposed world tour to raise money for the Jockey Club's appeal to buy the course will be as successful as other ageing superstars like Sinatra.

The Grand National thrills for its unpredictability, and not merely for the kind of unforseeable calamity which struck the 1967 race, when most of the field fell in a heap leaving Foinavon to find a way home, the Big horses, the big jockeys. The heaviest jockey wer to win this race of heavyweight was Ernie Piggott, grandfather of ester, who brought in two winner with 12 stone 7 pounds on their acks. He had a third win, in 1918, by hat was easy; Ernie was down to 11 one 6 that year. The courage ouired of man and beast was new better exemplified than last year hen Bob Champion, who had foug and won his own personal battle with cancer, and Aldaniti, which I months before had been declared unfit ever to race again, went at and conquered Aintree in 9 thates 47.20 seconds. The National is ke that: never short on human interes.

Nor indeed hort on the four-legged equival t. Not since Golden Miller, the star tudded steeplechaser race for mature of the thirties, did a horse attract quite such a public following as the miraculous Red Rum, still the only three-times winner of the National and with two second places thrown in for good measure. And just to gild the lily, Red Rum holds the National time record of 9 minutes 1.9 seconds. Last year's winning owner took home £51,324 in prize money, but there are few who go National Hunt racing — be they owners, trainers, or jockeys — for the financial rewards. Jumping is a sport for sportsmen, and a spectacle for those who watch.

Apart from anything else, the National actually lasts longer than almost any other race, whereas you could almost blow your nose and miss the Derby.
And of all the classic races, jumping or flat, none offers a greater test of the skill, endurance and courage of man and beast than the Grand National.

THE OWNER

Nick Embiricos, City shipbroker and owner of last year's National winner, Aldaniti

"Every owner has his own private dream of the race he would most like to win; the National was my own dream for many years.

"As a teenager I knew Tommy Smith, the American amateur jockey, in Virginia. When he came over in 1965 to ride Jay Trump in the National I met him again and saw him in the winner's enclosure after his victory. The excitement was tremendous, and I knew then where my own sights were set.
"I never thought Aldaniti would win. It was just a would win. It was just a fantastic feeling to get that horse and Bob Champion, the jockey, on the course, after all the tribulations they had both been through. My heart was in my mouth when I saw the size of the Aintree fences close up.

"It would be easy for an owner, after winning, to let it all go to his head. But the owner is just incidental; it's a owner is just incidental; it's a training and riding feat.

"I'm in it for the sport, not the money; National Hunt owners have to be, on the whole. The National prize money will cover Aldaniti's costs for life, but a gelding's value does not increase much, even after winning the National; you don't get much in breeding fees from a gelding."

THE TRAINER

Josh Gifford, trainer of eight Grand National runners including last year's winner Aldaniti

"The National is quite simply the greatest race in the world, with a world-wide following. It's every trainer's ambition to have a horse good enough to

"Its attraction is its uncer-tainty. Everybody who sets off has a chance of winning. Seventy-five per cent of the time it's the best horses that win it, but the outsiders have a better chance than in most other big races. "I might have three or four horses in training at any one time that would be capable of the National, I would only run a horse that I was certain could manage the course, and I would only run one I knew would enjoy jumping it. "I would not keep a horse out because I was afraid of him being injured. A horse could be injured in any race; that's just a chance you have to take. "You have to have a horse that jumps in the right style, and has the stamina. But apart from that, they get no special training for the National that my other horses wouldn't get. "Winning the National is the greatest professional satisfaction a trainer can possibly have. You go down in the history books, and it's something your family can treasure for ever." Alan Hamilton reports on the most thrilling steeplechase in the British racing calendar

The charge of the Aintree brigade

trouble with Aintree is you only get two chances ie year to ride the course, Topham Trophy and the onal itself. he fences are unique.

y've got spruce in them; 're green instead of black. here else in the country do get fences like that tree is unique in other s; that run-in at the end is ger than at any other course

I don't really worry about ing in the National more n other races. It's just part the job. I've had a couple of Is in it, but you can have a sty fail in any race. The gest risk to a jockey in the trional is loose horses getting "Winning the National is arvellous, of course, but to a ckey it's work, and you can't ford to worry too much that bu might get hurt; I certainly bn't. It's all a question of what ou're used to. I'm not terrified y Aintree but you would Aintree, but you would er get me up a ski jump. "And it's not a race that calls r special skill from the ockey. What you need is the ight mount, and a lot of luck.

"Is the National my favourite ace? That depends what mount?"

THE BOOKMAKER-

Britain's largest credit bookmaker "On actual bets placed, the Grand National is the biggest race of the year. We probably take more money on the Derby, where the bets are fewer but bigger. The other day I took a £2,000 bet on the National;

that's big for that race. "We open our shops an hour early on National day to catch the early morning shoppers, but it's not really a great race for the bookmakers; if any of the favoured runners wins, we will probably lose.

"There are always a lot of horses in the National which, barring the unforeseen, have no chance of winning at all, But the unforeseen happens more often in this than in most other "Foinavon at 100-1 was the last rank outsider to win, in 1967. Every other winner since then has been a fancied horse,

"The big gamblers don't usually touch it, because it's too much of a lottery; a runner can be brought down by a loose horse all too easily. But the small punters love it; it's a spectacle as much as a race, the media give it a big build-up, there's usually a gimmick like a grandfather or a lady riding, and it lasts a good 10 minutes."
